

More Rightists To Leave Oxford For Mississippi This Weekend

OXFORD, Ohio (AP)—The disappearance of three civil rights workers in Mississippi has not changed the setup of an integration training school here and the student volunteers say they are determined to go through with the project.

None of the 400 collegians have dropped out of the school — the second one being sponsored here by the National Council of Churches — since the disappearance of the three, whose burned car was found Tuesday.

One of the missing, Andy Goodman, 20, of New York, attended a similar training school here last week. The other missing men, Mickey Schwermer, 24, of New York, and James Cheney, 22, of Meridian, Miss., are field workers for the Congress of Racial Equality.

Mr. Schwermer's wife, who was on the staff here, left Tuesday night for Mississippi.

"I expected things like this to happen," said a volunteer, Barbara Mutnick, 20, Plainfield, N. J., "but this makes it real, knowing those young people were here last week."

"Of course, I'm scared in going to Mississippi but I can't think about it," Miss Mutnick, a Boston University student added.

"I'm more determined to go ahead," said David Batzka, 23, of Monticello, Ind. "This proves something needs to be done."

Mr. Batzka said he was going to Mississippi because "Christians should be involved in civil rights work."

He said he was "greatly impressed" with the leadership of the training school which is using the facilities of Western College for Women.

A University of Washington English teacher, Mrs. Elizabeth Fusco, 27, Seattle, said she volunteered because "there's a job that needs to be done."

"The disappearance has only strengthened my commitment and makes more clear the necessity of getting in there and changing things," Mrs. Fusco said.

"People in Mississippi can't help themselves," said Wayne Anderson, 27, St. Cloud, Minn. "They kill off people and that's why I'm going—to try and correct this."

The students are to leave Oxford this weekend for Mississippi where they are scheduled to help this summer in Negro voter registration drives and the setting up community centers and freedom schools. About 200 students left here last weekend.

Robert Moses of the Student non-violent co-ordinating Committee and director of the Mississippi summer project, said, "We are not going to stop and we know we are dealing with people who kill."

Despite the concern over the three missing men, classes at the training school went on as usual Wednesday.

There was one change in the program, however. Bayard Rustin, Washington civil rights leader, who was to have spoken, had to delay his trip until today. Mr. Rustin, who organized the civil rights march on Washington last summer, now is scheduled to address several of the classes this afternoon.
